Bio: <https://polisci.indiana.edu/about/faculty/koren-ore.html>

Ore Koren, Ph.D., is an Assistant Professor in the IU Department of Political Science, specializing in international relations and methodology.

Dr. Koren was a fellow at the Dickey Center at Dartmouth College and a Jennings Randolph Peace Scholar at the United States Institute of Peace. Within international relations, his research has involved innovative approaches to studying the causes of civil conflict, with an emphasis on how environmental pressures and global institutions shape patterns of political violence. More recently, he began exploring linkages between zoonotic diseases and global meat production.

Dr. Koren’s work has appeared or is forthcoming in multiple academic journals, including Journal of Politics, British Journal of Political Science, International Studies Quarterly, Journal of Conflict Resolution and American Journal of Agricultural Economics, as well as in policy outlets such as Foreign Policy, The Monkey Cage (Washington Post), and NPR. His book, The Politics of Mass Killing in Autocratic Regimes (coauthored with Bumba Mukherjee), which was published in June 2018, explains when and where food shortages can lead to mass killing within nondemocratic states.
